You Are What Makes this World A Little Less Crazy Members Work Through Crisis & Meet Student Needs

Now more than ever, California owes much of its success to its public schools, colleges and universities that produce the scientists, technicians, engineers, and educated workforce. Teachers are deeply committed to the success of every student. Educators have many extraordinary skills they pull from to reach and teach students. Educators are advocates, inventors and problem solvers. Teachers are listeners, explorers, role models, motivators and mentors. They are idealists and dreamers, debaters and negotiators, adventurers and mediators. Although one teacher can be influential, life changing, even, for a student, it takes the entire school community -- Education Support Professionals, K-12 teachers, college faculty and parents -- to provide the public education all of our students deserve.
